WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Scattered to Numerous Wet Storms Today

Dry and breezy over the higher terrain Thursday-Friday

A trough of low pressure located along the Central Coast is pumping monsoonal moisture into the region from the southwest latest satellite and forecast data suggests scattered to numerous storms are expected across the mountains and even some northern valley locations by afternoon. Convection will increase in coverage through the afternoon hours and become increasingly wet. The primary concern will be abundant lightning in the Southern Cascades and the Northwestern mountains. The Northern Sierras can also expect significant lightning as well; however, the wetness of the storms are expected to mitigate some of the large fire potential. Widely scattered convection is expected across the southern Mendocino NF as well. By Wednesday, the plume of moisture will begin to move off to the east impacting mainly the Northeastern California, Northern Sierras, and the Far East Side predictive service areas (PSA)s with scattered wet convection. A few storms may also be possible in the Northwestern Mountains near Mount Shasta.

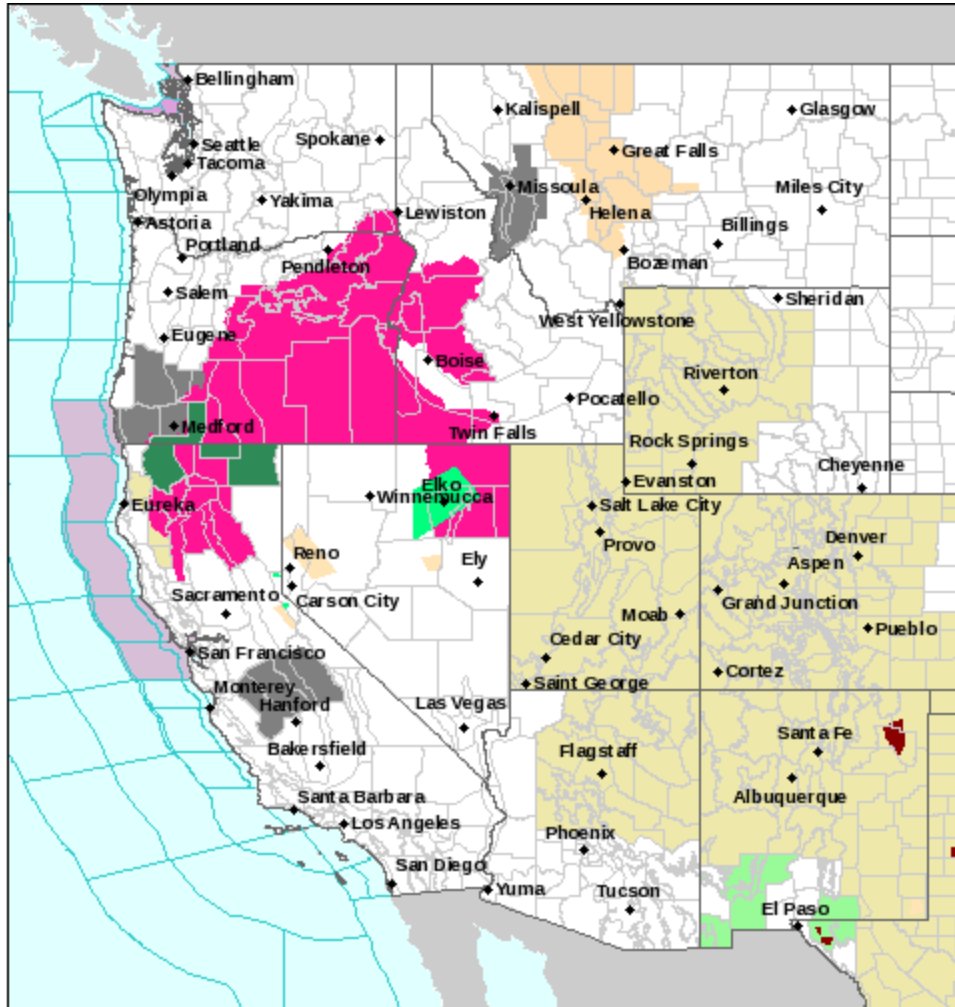

Looking beyond Wednesday, the focus shifts from convection to wind as a cold front moves east across the Pacific Northwest on Thursday. Breezy west winds are expected across the higher terrain in the northern PSAs that border Oregon. Breeziness could continue into Friday as a weak disturbance moves across the northern portion of the state. Looking beyond Friday, a very warm and dry ridge of high pressure will set up over the region and over the Great Basin prompting a return to above normal temperatures, low afternoon humidities, and poor smoke dispersion.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

An area of low pressure off the Central California coast will slowly move east and will weaken during the next few days. As a result, there will be a slow warming of temperatures across the area with the most noticeable warming expected today across the inland valleys. Daytime highs this afternoon will be in the upper 70s to the 80s across the mountains, upper 80s to the 90s across the inland valleys, and near 100 across the lower and eastern deserts. There will continue to be isolated wet thunderstorms each afternoon across the Sierra as well as over the eastern deserts through Wednesday with dry weather following into the weekend. The marine layer will slowly decrease later this week with varying amounts of low clouds and fog during the night and morning hours. Minimum humidity will be in the 20-40% range through Thursday. Winds will be variable 5 to 15 mph most days this week, except for gusty northerly winds of 10-25 mph across the Santa Ynez Mountains Thursday evening and overnight. By the weekend, high pressure will develop over the Great Basin with temperatures increasing to above normal levels across all the inland areas. Weak offshore flow Sunday and Monday will help to boost temperatures even further, with above normal temperatures expected even at the beaches by Monday. A few wet thunderstorms may return to some of the desert areas near the Colorado River Sunday and Monday, otherwise it will be dry across the region. Night and morning low clouds and fog will become confined to the immediate coastline by Sunday.
